Fundamentally diabolic (aka Devil's Hole)

Jacko had to make last minute changes for his run so instead of his 'go to' The Farmers' Inn he relocated to The Priory at Devil's Hole. There was a chill wind and moisture in the air as we gathered in the top car park. No one was sure how many would be turning up after their efforts marshalling for Liberation Day and the traditional long liquid lunch afterwards! Illegal is to be commended for his sterling efforts to ensure that CH3 did its usual superb job. We were pleasantly surprised at a goodly turn out bolstered somewhat by Molehill's visiting family.

After updating us with the local sporting results (which is becoming just as enthralling as Steptoe's historical facts when he was GM) Jacko called the On-On and off we went.

The runner's trail can be found in Steptoe's Strava screenshot reproduced below. The hare did explain that there was virgin territory and some hazardous ground.

The walkers headed off along the cliff path in an eastward direction. We were making good progress until Molly, Molehill's granddaughter, realised that her bum bag had been open and her credit cards, keys and other paraphernalia were now littering said cliff path. Luckily she found everything and even managed to catch us up – oh the joys of youth.

When we all arrived back at The Priory the sun had come out and we were able to enjoy our refreshments outside.

The downs downs were for Steptoe being interviewed on telly at Liberation Day but not mentioning the Hash, Molly for her bum bag malfunction, ET for mobile phone abuse (she nominated Bags of It who nobly stepped into the breach and our hare Jacko the Magnificent).
